

How to help a friend who has experienced violence:

Validate their feelings

Let the survivor know that you believe them and that their experience is valid. Use phrases such as:

- "I believe you."
- "It's not your fault."
- "It was brave of you to tell me."

Listen generously

- Remain calm
- Communicate understanding and acceptance
- Counter self-blaming statements; remember that the perpetrator is responsible for the violence, not the survivor

Offer to get help

- Ask: "What can I do to help?"
- Empower the survivor's decision making process
- Offer to go with the survivor to get help

What you should know:

Sexual Violence

Any sexual act that occurs without consent.

Consent is a freely given, conscious, and enthusiastic yes.

Relationship Violence

Relationship violence is a purposeful pattern of coercive behaviors a person uses to maintain power and control over their partner. This can include physical, emotional, verbal, & sexual abuse.

Stalking

An intentional course of conduct directed at a specific person that is intended to harass or cause fear. This may include repeated visual or physical proximity, nonconsensual communication, and threats.

Warning signs of an abusive relationship

- Isolation: your partner keeps you from spending time with friends, family, or interferes with your interests
- Physical Violence: hits, punches, kicks, shoves, or restrains you to keep you leaving a room
- Jealously: gets mad when you talk to other people
- Control: insists that you call to "check in" or ask permission to do things
- Put Downs: calls you names, humiliates you, or tells you you're not good enough
- Threats/Blackmail: threatens to physically harm you, threatens to expose private pictures or information, spreads rumors

In a healthy relationship, your partner supports you, respects your boundaries, gives you the space you need, & always treats you with respect.
